Georgios Farmakis is a civil litigator with a wide range of experience litigating various matters at the state, federal and appellate levels. He has experience handling all aspects of litigation through discovery, motion practice, trial, and, if necessary, appeal.

Georgios focuses his practice in the professional liability group where he regularly defends licensed professionals such as physicians, psychiatrists, chiropractors, medical professionals, and attorneys in complex professional liability cases.

Similarly, his practice also specializes in defending medical providers, private employers, nursing home and assisted living facilities, municipalities, religious institutions, and transportation companies in areas of general civil litigation, personal injury, wrongful death and survival actions, employment law, harassment, discrimination, whistleblower and wage-and-hour employment related matters. He also has years of experience in successfully defending against civil rights claims for municipalities, healthcare professionals, and county correctional facilities.

While in law school, Georgios previously served as a judicial intern to the Honorable Robert B. Kugler, District Judge, United States District Court for the District of New Jersey.
