Stephen Yuhas defends insurance carriers, third-party administrators and self-insured employers in workers' compensation litigation.

Stephen has extensive experience with the New Jersey Workers' Compensation Act, dependency benefits, second injury funds, uninsured employer's funds, medical provider applications and subrogation.

He has handled numerous claims involving all categories of benefits under the New Jersey Workers' Compensation Act. These include medical, temporary disability, permanent partial disability and permanent total disability. In addition, he handles claims involving dependency benefits, the second injury fund, the uninsured employer's fund, medical provider applications and subrogation matters and regularly appears for court hearings including pretrial conferences, motions and trials in multiple jurisdictions located throughout New Jersey.

Before joining Weber Gallagher, Stephen worked as a staff attorney for a regional multi-state insurance company. In that capacity, Stephen exclusively handled the defense and litigation of workers' compensation claims on a statewide basis. He has two decades of collective experience in the field of workers' compensation.
