Travis McElhaney focuses his practice on subrogation, reimbursement and recovery cases for insurance carriers and self-insureds. He also defends corporations and insurance companies in construction and general liability matters.

In addition, Travis handles toxic tort defense claims. The cases are often multi-party lawsuits, with significant damages, alleging exposure to various substances including asbestos, mercury and other substances.

Since 2013, he was recognized by the publisher of the Pennsylvania edition of Super Lawyers magazine as a "Rising Star," an honor given to the top 2.5 percent of attorneys in the Commonwealth.

Experience

- Represented a commercial HVAC distributor in multi-party construction litigation. The plaintiff alleged that the HVAC units supplied by our client were defective and, because of that, the plaintiff's HVAC system had failed to function properly from the time it was installed. Our position was that the equipment's failures were the result of poor overall system design by the architect and/or improper use and maintenance by the plaintiff. The plaintiff made a significant six-figure demand. Our client paid a nominal amount to obtain a dismissal of all claims against it.
