Rick Brown focuses his practice on defending clients in general liability, construction accidents, complex mass torts, and toxic torts matters in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Rick has decades of experience and has handled cases before local and federal courts. He has also represented clients in arbitration matters. Rick handles construction litigation cases involving serious injuries that occur at a construction site with multiple defendants and complex contractual indemnity claims amongst the defendants. Rick also defends construction defect claims when a company is sued for not properly performing their contractual duties as they relate to a particular project.

In his practice, Rick handles slip and fall cases for national grocery chains, banks, and third-party vendors. He also represents home builders and contractors in alleged construction defect cases. Rick manages cases involving commercial motor vehicles, premises liability, and dram shop law.

Additionally, Rick represents local counsel for corporate businesses in cases of alleged occupational and non-occupational exposure to mass torts substances, such as benzene and asbestos.
